and his friends were committed to making their own version of the Fallout franchise, and really sought to create a game that used the best of what the original game had to offer.
This would be a game that would not only be easy to follow, but also be fun to play. That meant the community was given the opportunity to create their own unique weapons, skills, and even their own dialogue.
Of course, it wouldn't be possible to make the storyline of the game fit into the original Fallout universe, and so a new story was crafted. They created a story that would give the player new heroes, new locations, and new weapons to use while in the game. The question of why they decided to make this game became crucial, and they came up with the idea that they should create a series of games that would follow an apocalypse. The Dark Age of Camelot (DAoC) was the first game in this series, and was released in 1997. It created the closest thing to a true Fallout game that would ever be made. No longer was this a game that was just given to the players, but they could create their own stories and quests. The game was an incredible success, with over 1 million copies sold by the end of the year, and a sequel was being planned. It spawned a number of other games, including the Fallout series. While the original game would be called Fallout: The Elder Scrolls, they wanted to make it more than that, and went with the name: The Elder Scrolls Adventures: Redguard. It was the second game in the series, and it featured a completely new story from the DAoC game. Instead of the destruction of the Capital Wasteland, they took the idea a step further, and when they were ready for the sequel, the world ended up collapsing on an even larger scale. The third game in the series, and the sequel to
